

Voices of Hope

Today, what gives me hope is the level of engagement I see in our communities, here and across the country. I'm excited that people are responding to the needs of our world – people are plugged in, informed and looking for what's next to put us on a better course.

I do think the world is yearning for a place where common purpose can pull us through. I'm heartened to see what individual people are doing to get us there. To my mind, this is the Holy Spirit at work in our lives, and this gives me hope.
